

Aldo

It was early in September of 2018 when I decided I wanted to adopt a furry little companion to accompany me through my early stages of adulthood. For days and days on end, I scoured different websites and shelters close to my home looking for a dog to call my own. I stumbled upon a post about Aldo (formerly known as Corky). His little smile in the pictures warmed my heart, and I did some research to see if I could visit him. One trip up to Wyoming later, I knew he was mine. As I entered his foster-dad's house, I was showered with love from the little guy. This was further affirmed by his foster-dad telling me that he was "quite possibly, one of my favorite fosters."

Aldo got accommodated to his new situation incredibly well and continues to be my best friend. He is an utter and complete goofball, never failing to make me laugh at his shenanigans. He is incredibly smart but is defiantly a "free thinker" in his own right. The only thing he fears worse than car rides are baths, but we are slowly and surely working on those. I couldn't thank Beth, Jim, and everybody else that works with Dalmatian Rescue of Colorado for uniting me with my best buddy.

With the utmost sincerity and gratitude,
Jordan and Aldo

Below are a couple of candid shots of the regal prince in his natural habitat!

First Camping Trip Together!

Red Feather Lakes (Sept. 2018)

Job Interviews Can Sure Be Ruff

(April 2019)

Quite Possibly the World's Most
Photogenic Pup

(Feb. 2019)

Batwings, ENGAGE!

(Feb. 2019)

“Aldo, No Jumpies. No Jumpies.
Aldo! Okay, Fine.”

(Nov. 2018)

“These New Roommates are a Handful”

(July 17, 2019)

A Compilation of the Best Aldo Faces That Have Ever Graced a Screen

